CERTIFICATION INFORMATION KIT

Why Certify?

Build on what you already know

Depending on your professional experience, you may already support or lead complex projects.

The process of obtaining a project management certification will formalize the knowledge, skills and experience you have acquired.

And whereas most certifications demand the rote memorization of formulas and processes, we teach from a comprehensive body of industry tested best-practices that can be applied and scaled to any sector, industry, or project.

By benchmarking the highest of standards, we have earned global recognition, which immediately and credibly transfers to our certification holders.

Open doors

Our ever expanding network of Certification holders welcomes you to a peer-led community of project management professionals that opens up new opportunities, roles, clients and mentorship.

Boost your career

Project management Certification shows employers, managers and clients that you're determined to be recognized among the elite in your industry.

Holding an internationally recognized project management certification may help get your foot in the door for a key interview or be an influential factor when pitching for a new client.

What's more, a project management certification can help you to take on new responsibilities.

Certification tells others that you're prepared to advance your skills and are ready to take on more challenging and complex projects.

Earn more

Top organizations are always on the lookout for professionals with recognized certifications and may even make it a requirement for higher paying roles.

Studies show that project certification holders can command salaries up to 20% greater than their peers.

Enable innovation

Innovation is successful change

Projects are how we deliver it

Project management is a powerful tool for addressing the complex needs of today's organizations.

Unlike narrowly focused fields – such as HR, marketing, finance or IT – project management brings together an array of skill sets spanning creative and critical thinking, leadership, risk, change and stakeholder management.

Simply put, project management provides a structured yet flexible framework for tackling a diverse range of initiatives faster, better and in a cost efficient manner.

That is why project management is the most in-demand occupation in the world today.

Let's talk about your future

At the Center for Project Innovation, we train and certify great project managers so they can be the change we need to see in the world.

We also work extensively with government, private and not-for-profit partners to create job-ready skills where they're needed, facilitate best practice in project leadership, and mentor professional project managers working on a fascinating array of projects.

Like many of the great innovators who inspire us, we're quietly making a difference on every continent in the world, including Antarctica.

How do I get Certified?

STEP 1 – Knowledge

The knowledge requirement is the same for each level of certification.

If you haven't studied project management formally, complete OPEN our 100% free to access online project education program.

Alternatively, you can attend an Advanced Recognition and Certification (ARC) workshop conducted by the Center or one of our education partners.

Step 2 – Experience

OPEN and ARC graduates will already have an account created with us at <https://project.info>.

Choose the certification level you wish to apply for and add your experience to your account profile.

If you have not completed OPEN or an ARC workshop, you may need to create an account and provide evidence of your previous project management studies.

STEP 3 – Skills

Once an assessor has verified your application, we will invite you to a one-hour skills assessment interview.

To prepare, review the certification assessment guide relevant to your chosen certification level. It includes the typical questions asked during the interview.

You be informed of the outcome of your assessment at the conclusion of the interview.

Upon successful completion, your digital credentials will be made available immediately. We will show you how to add these credentials to your LinkedIn profile and how they can be independently verified with us by third parties, including potential employers.
